

YouGov Public Data: an encyclopaedia of public opinion

Since YouGov was founded 2000, we have been at the forefront of research innovation. We pride ourselves in the accuracy of our research and data analytics. Our polling on topics of public interest is made freely available to everyone as part of our ongoing efforts to create a platform for sharing views and starting conversations. We call this our public data offering.

By making our public data available to everyone, we allow members of the public, journalists, community leaders, governments, researchers, and academics access to opinion research that would otherwise be restricted to those who could afford it. This supports YouGov's mission to enable individuals to be part of a global discussion and leaders in all sectors to understand the opinions and beliefs of the populations they serve.

This factsheet illustrates the depth of our public data and the extent to which it is being accessed, reflecting the value of this resource to the global community.

Our public data sites

64.2 million UK
page views per year

33.5 million US

Access to our public data

Our public data websites receive millions of visitors each year – the majority to our UK (4.3 million visitors) and US (2.9 million visitors) sites¹. Politics is the most popular data category in both countries with 9.5 million combined page views², followed by Entertainment (2.3 million combined views). In 2022, in the UK the most popular tracker was Boris Johnson's approval rating (253,356 views), while in the US the most popular tracker was President Joe Biden's approval rating (20,049 views).

In addition to the UK and US, our public data offering is also available in Australia, France, Germany, Italy, Singapore, and Spain. Across all countries, we have made data available on over 1,700 data topics within the categories of politics, sport, health, travel, retail, and more.

Our public sites are updated every week day, with daily polls, new popularity rankings, and editorial content covering the most current news stories.
